[Skeat regards mundungus as a Latinised form, which "may have been due to an association of idea with fungus", but it is simpler to regard it as a mispronunciation of the plural mondongos. The 'Century' Dictionary defines "Tobacco made up into a black roll", which explains the name as 'tobacco which looks like black-puddings'. Certainly the association of the odor of strong tobacco with that of tripe or black-puddings is far-fetched.]
